"Our role as a corporate citizen has expanded as the talent mismatch continues to grow between employers and candidates," said Lancy Chui, ManpowerGroup Hong Kong Managing Director. "More and more candidates are finding that they lack the skills demanded in real time by today's employers. ManpowerGroup Hong Kong has always worked hard to prepare candidates for the workforce, but in the Human Age economic forces are making it increasingly difficult for companies to find candidates and for candidates to find the right training. We are pleased to have the opportunity to collaborate with organizations that support skills training and career planning."

ManpowerGroup Hong Kong regularly conducts seminars and resume-building clinics for graduating students and unemployed individuals. By partnering with universities and NGOs, ManpowerGroup Hong Kong connects more individuals to meaningful work and helps advance their careers.

"Communities which are committed to effectively preparing individuals for today's workforce must forge strong partnerships with job training experts such as ManpowerGroup and educators," said Darryl Green, ManpowerGroup President of Asia Pacific and Middle East. "ManpowerGroup's Hong Kong team has done an excellent job of providing skills and career planning expertise through Hong Kong organizations, which can help support an individual's long-term career path."
