"Achieving parity in leadership positions is a top priority for our company so I'm delighted that some of our most inspirational leaders are being recognized on this list," said Jonas Prising, ManpowerGroup Chairman & CEO. "All of our leaders are committed to diversity and inclusion and attracting and promoting more women into our organization. We know that when we set ambitious representation goals we can deliver on them and really shift the needle. I'm proud to be celebrating our talented female leaders and the significant contribution they make to our business and this industry."

"Around the globe the fight to increase female representation continues as women are outnumbered in leadership positions, boardrooms and the upper echelons of business. While women dominate the staffing industry at branch-level, this is not reflected in our C-suites," said Subadhra Sriram, Editor & Publisher, Media Products at SIA. "It continues to be essential that we recognize female leadership and call out the immensely important roles these women play in developing, driving and delivering solutions, work models and value for the industry. It is exciting to see the list grow this year to include more of the executives who are making things happen across the workforce solutions ecosystem."
